

MERIDIAN PREPARES TO EXPAND DIGITAL COLLECTIONS COMMUNICATIONS WITH CONSUMERS

“If the compliance changes do get implemented, we will be able to react in a timely fashion, and a large part of that is because of Nordis and Espresso.”

The Challenge

With changing regulations and consumer habits, Meridian Financial Services, a collection agency for the vacation ownership industry, is rethinking its outreach strategies. Phone calls and mail are less effective as consumers increasingly interact digitally. Automated calls are under fire, with the recent Federal Communications Commission ruling that encourages blocking robocalls by default. The Consumer Financial Protection Bureau is considering further restrictions, including limiting weekly collection calls and how collectors handle recorded conversations. Posing another type of operational challenge for collectors, the CFPB is also proposing to allow electronic delivery for compliance correspondence, such as validation letters, that currently must be mailed.

The Solution

Meridian is leveraging Nordis Technologies’ Espresso® platform to digitally connect with customers. Already using Nordis’ solutions for developing and mailing collection notices and other customer correspondence, Meridian is also creating and delivering electronic statements to customers who opt in. “It’s about conversing back and forth, which email and texting make possible. More and more consumers are using these methods to communicate,” said Greg Sheperd, president of Meridian. The firm plans to quickly innovate further through more digital compliance and focus on customer experience if the CFPB enacts the new rules. “The consumer experience is everything,” Sheperd said, so catering to vacation owner preferences makes good business sense: “A debtor today is an owner in good standing tomorrow.”
